No Pension Fund Vote

Representatives of the departments announced yesstead the state legislature is to be petitioned to amend the law so that it will be mandatory for the municipal councils to authorize taxes to meet pension payments.

In view of the submission of three other tax-increasing proposals-a .75 mill levy for the City hospital and two bond issues, one for a $160,000 city hall and another for a $4,000 fire station, the patrolmen and firemen have acted wisely in deferring the vote upon ing women, housewives who hope to add a mite to the the pension plan.

This means that East Liverpool electors will be handed six instead of seven ballots when they go to the polls on November 6. Besides the special issues- ing outfit for several times its actual value and seldom the proposed tax levy and the two bond issues, the latter being printed on one ticket-each elector will mark presidential, state, district and county, judicial and a couple of dollars for an outfit which they could buy for referendum ballots. The latter question pertains to a few cents at the stationery store. In addition they salary increases for judges while they are holding of-

McNary-Haugen Story

Now that the equalization fee has been entirely testified to the futility and expense of this procedure. ruled out of the picture by leaders of both the Republican and Democratic parties, it is interesting to view out fight for the McNary-Haugen bill.

From the days when Secretary Wallace, "blindfolded, walked toward the edge of the political cliff," the fight for the unsound McNary-Haugen measure has left a path of wide political ruin.

the veto of the bill with its impossible equalization fee, Bible but the C. O. D. charge was $5 plus postage. Modern Miller, a flour trade paper, who gives some highly interesting glances behind the political curtains and indicates some of the motives back of McNary-Haugenism.

Here is his story:

"The original McNary-Haugen bill was conceived, worked out in detail and drafted by George N. Peek, then associated with a farm implement manufacturing department as chief of the bureau of markets, but, it was rumored, had developed qualities of the politician.

"It later developed that Mr. Peek contemplated 'severing his connection' with the farm implement company. Also, some of those who were sitting on the side-lines at the time suspected that the possible ambitions of mission proposed in the bill.

"By persistent effort, the two men finally convinced Secretary Wallace and he approved the bill, the origi- tor, Washington, D. C. nal McNary-Haugen bill. And the tragedy of it! Up to this time, and throughout the fight for the bill, as the matter was seen day by day by several correspondents close to the administration, the other members of the cabinet silently watched Wallace, blindfolded, walking toward the edge of the political cliff, and never so much to teach dancing? R. M. as called out a word of warning. They let him go to his political doom, for that is what his advocacy of the measure meant, so far as the administration was concerned. By his support of the bill, Wallace found himself gradually edged out of the charmed genial atmosphere of the sacred inner circle of the cabinet. Figuratively, of course; for physically nothing was changed."

Of course, there finally came a physical change, too, in Secretary Wallace, and a psychological change—the feeling that he had made a political mistake, which he had been led into against his better judgment. This worried the secretary greatly, and worry brought on the physical ailment resulting in his untimely death. In there had been in the centuries before it? J. R this way so frequently run the operations of politics.

Mr. Peek, by the way, still is rampaging around the country advocating the equalization fee and trying to get also much more costly and destructive. people to believe that Hoover ought to be defeated, although Governor Smith has flatly and unequivocally rejected the equalization fee. Neither party will have anything to do with it.

The equalization fee, as previously pointed out, has and Mrs. Hatch continue to rage, tilting at windmills and following a dead Cid into battle with an imaginary activities.

Electric Fertilizer

"Amplified Crop Grown by Radio" reads the headline. Which clever caption is hardly borne out by the Berlin cable under it, though that is remarkable enough. Bumper crops are being raised over there by a system of "elektrokultur."

Wires are strung like radio antennae over the field and connected with the ground, which has a similar set of wires below the surface. The electric current used is thus spread through the soil, with astonishing results. Of two fields sided by side, having the same soil and natural fertility, one treated with the electrical process produced a bountiful crop and the other, without such help, a very poor crop.

"Everything is electricity," some thinkers have said. Particularly, "life is electricity." Certainly electricity has a great deal to do with life and can stimulate it greatly, whether in plants, animals or human beings.

Along with the German experiments, there is some talk of "broadcasting fertility" as radio programs are now broadcast. It is rash nowadays to say that any scientific achievement is impossible, but they will have to show the farmers.

HASKIN DAILY LETTER By Frederick J. Haskin

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 14.-Protecting the pub lic against the mail order shark is one of the duties of the post office department. Men, and women too, with elastic consciences are constantly engaged in coaxing money out of the pockets and bank accounts of the ucwary. Writers of smoothly seductive and convincing advertisements, men of ability and imagination, enlist under the standard of the mail order crook and vicimize not only the credulous and loose-fisted but also the conservative investor and the so-called burnt child.

The dishonest promoter fully appreciates how well it pays to advertise. He sends out sensational circulars by the half million knowing that some will believe his statements and part with their cash.

One of these advertisements said "If you throw this in the waste basket-Put the waste basket in the safe. He even employed the transparent pretense of limiting East Liverpool electors will not pass judgment at the may share my prosperity." The oil well he featured in his circulars did not belong to him. In fact it had firemen's pension funds, although the city council has gone dry and the drilling rig had been removed at the gone on record in favor of the plan submitted by the time he was offering fabulous fortunes for small investments. This man added many a name to his sucker list but he is now in fail.

The merchandise sent to the victims of this scheme was filthy rag bag stuff, utterly useless, unsanity, unwearable and, certainly unsalable. The work-at-home scheme is one well known to the post office department. Its victims are poor hard-workfamily income. Whether they are duped by offers of $20 to $30 a week sewing smocks at home or by an offer of $5 an hour addressing cards and copying names, the scheme is the same. The promoter sells a cheap workif ever buys any work from his customers. Usually he has no market for the product he featurer.

Persons falling for the card-addressing scheme pay a are furnished a circular which is supposed to contain directions for making $5 an hour addressing cards. This may easily be done, they are informed, by clipping personal mention items from newspapers and addressing cards to the persons named in the items offering to forward the clippings for twenty-five cents. Another self-designated professor without scientific training concluded that anemia is caused by intestinal parasites which, by all means, should be removed. To some of the sparkling little sidelights of the long-drown accomplish this noble purpose he sold finely ground granite rock grit which is much the same as powered glass. Taking a tablespoonful at a time the patient was supposed to grind up the naughty parasites in his tummy and so grow well and strong.

Nor are the religious neglected. An ingenious fel low hit upon the scheme of mailing C. O. D. parcel post Rumblings of a few disgruntled die-hards protesting death notices. Some relatives happened to know better and the ingenious gentleman fell into the toils of the law.

With these and many another cleverly planned business, dishonest in concept and operation, the post office department has to cope. Against the persons using the mails to defraud, the postmaster general issues fraud orders. These orders cause the return to sender of all mail addressed to the persons and concerns named in the orders. Moreover the returned letters are stamped company, and Charles J. #### ANNIE LAURIE'S TIMELY ADVICE

Payments DEAR ANNIE LAURIE: I am a girl in my teens. Recently a married man (with a little boy of about four or five years of age) has asked to take me out. His wife and he are very good friends of my family and I do not wish to hurt this man's feelings by refusing, but I hate ever so much to go out with him, as he is married. Please advise me

BLONDIE. BLONDIE: Don't accept his invitations, Blondie. If his wife is to be in the party, that's another thing. But alone—never! You would be placing yourself in a very awkward position as far as public opinion is concerned, and it is best to firmly, but in a friendly way, refuse all such invitations.

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE: About three months ago I met young man for whom I thought I cared. I realized later that it was merely an infatuation. One day upon meeting him on the street, an attempt at friendly greeting which I made was completely ignored. My problem is this: Is it proper for me to give him his ring personally or to mail it and ask for mine in return? Also, is an explanation necessary?

DOUBTFUL. DOUBTFUL: I should return the young man's ring by registered mail, with the request that he return yours. If he does not, you might ask your father or mother to write requesting

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE:

I am in my teens and I like to have a lot of boy friends. There is one boy who is a little older than I am. I have had one date with him and since then he hasn't asked me for any more dates. I like him better than any other boy I have ever gone with.

Would it be proper for me to write him a friendly note and ask him what's wrong with him? He always treats me nice when I am around him and he never fails to speak to me. BROWN EYES.

BROWN EYES: No, Brown Eyes, don't write the young man, because a young man never has much respect or affection for a girl who "runs after" him. And that is about what you would be doing. Just be as charming as you possibly can every time you are in his company, but don't try to force his attentions. There may be many reasons why he hasn't asked you to go out the second time. Why not sometime when you are having a little party, invite him also? If he accepts the invitation, it gives him an opening to ask to call, and if he doesn't, well, the best thing to do is try and forget.

I am a girl eighteen and have never had a regular fellow, but I think it would not be hard to get one. I am considered a very pretty girl. I have a good education. There's a young fellow whom I know his name and am very anxious to meet him. No one seems to know him. Please tell me how I can draw his attention or meet him in some way.

NEW YORK, Sept. 14. - Sweeping advances in the motor stocks, the specialties, the oils and a few of the high grade rails at the beginning of trading today reflected Wall Street's attitude toward the easier tone in the money market, which persisted in the face of a new $96,000,000 increase in the total of brokers' loans.

General Motors pushed ahead to above 209 for a new three-point lead, and sold only fractionally below its record price of 210. The stocks was turned over in huge volume, as also were half a dozen or more of the pop-ular motor shares, under the lead of Chrysler, which again topped all of its previous price records. Reo Motors joined the active list in a brisk runup to around 34, and Studebaker was actively bought above 82.

A new buying movement in the oils wept Marland, Mid-Continent, Texas Corporation and the Standard Oils ahead. Bulls in the oils reported that President Walter Teagle of the Standard of New Jersey returning today from important conferences in Europe, would announce new plans for world-wide oil conservation. There were few reactionary traces in the first hour, buying demand crowded the market and the tape ran 17 minutes behind the market in ,000,000-share turnover. A few of the mercantile stocks and equipments sold higher, but the market encountered profit-taking in the second hour and developed an irregular tone.

LeeGrand's Pace Mark Still Good

Fair Entries Fail to Disturb Old Record of 2:111/4.

ISBON, O., Sept. 14.—County fair race program closed here yes-terday afternoon with the $50 prize packet for a new track record in the 2:14 pace going unclaimed. The mark of 2:1114, hung up by Lee Grand in 1926, is still good.

All races yesterday were won in straight heats, although there was considerable trouble in the 2:18 pace, prompted by Junewood, a sorrel mare owned and driven by E. O. Crammer

Entries were not as numerous as the first day's race before the program started. Four were withdrawn in the 2:17 trot, the event winding up with four in the final heat.

After the last heat of the third race ended, Ora Lou, a sorrel gleding owned by Harry Caton of Lisbon was auctioned before the judges' stand by Commissioner J. Howard Sinclair and was sold to Walter Humphrey of Lisbon for $75.

"I can make more money doing other work than racing horses,' Caton told the crowd as he paraded the racer before the crowd that lingered in the grand stand. The horse had been entered in the 2:18 pace and took fifth, sixth and seventh position in the three heats run in this race.
In the pony race, Freda Rupert of In the pony race, Freda Rupert of New Waterford, riding "Beauty," took first money and Raymond Ritchie of Berlin Center, riding "Bud," took second money. Third money went to Sella Bacon of East Palestine, riding "Tom." Jones Appeared Headed Toward Another Title.

By Davis J. Walsh.
6ST NEWTON, Mass., Sept. 14.
—One Englishman, with the aspect of a school master and the fighting punch of a stevedore; one Harvard sophomore, slightly more tenacious than the average Hangnail; one reformed private secretary whose golf was too go I to waste upon the keys o' a typewriter, and the inevitable survivor, this man Jones they are always talking about.

These gentlemen were all that was left of an original field of 143 when the semi-final round of the national amateur golf championship opened this morning with two matches sched-uled for thirty-six holes each.

In the first of these, Tom Perkins, champion of Great Britain and fast coming into general recognition as a worthy one, was to face George Voigt, the ex-aide to wealth and social dis-tinction. In the other, this man Jones will play Phillips Finlay, youthful and, therefore, dangerous. Sometimes, there is nothing quite so exalted as Sometimes, the confidence of a youth who is tast-ing the elixir of his first important victory. However, it is doubtful whether even a hard sophomore would consider himself justified in feeling hardly the slightest bit over-confident n going in there with this man Jones.

Besides the common impression to-day was that Jones at last had found the key to Babe Burn's mysteries. There was no alternate impression to be gained, as a matter of fact, after his record of three under par for the twenty-three holes needed yesterday to win that gripping struggle by 14 and 13 from John Beck, the unfortunate Englishman.

Jones was so typically Jones that he would have been 9 up on Finlay at the twenty-three holes, matching Jones' card with that turned in by Finlay against Johnston. And on the same basis of comparison, he would have been 4 up on Perkins and 7 up on Voight.
Mistakes will happen of course, and

I certainly don't wish to break my record by making one now, but still I feel impelled to state that every sign points an index finger toward another victory for the automaton, thus giving him four amateur titles of the last five contested. It also would round out a six-year dynasty, during which this man Jones never has known what it is to be without at least one major championship.

His record over this interval fol-be formed between concrete walls. In these hatchways steel cages, each capable of holding the largest standard passenger automobile, will be placed on top of each other, between steel guides.

Move Like Belt.

Movement of the cages will be or the same principle as a belt conveyor. The tiers of steel cages in each pair of adjacent hatchways will operate simultaneously. The rotation of the cages will be controlled by means of hydraulic mechanism oper ating in the basement. When one tier is raised the adjacent tier will be lowered. As a cage reaches the top of the hatchway of the tier which is being lifted, it will shunt automati-cally and horizontally into the adjacent tier. At the same time, the cage at the bottom of the lowering tier will shunt into the tier which is being raised. The two adjacent tiers, containing some cages which are empty and some with automobiles, automati-and some with automobiles, automatically rotate to a point where the load of both tiers briances evenly on the machinery in the basement.

No manual labor of any kind above the first floor is necessary or possible in this skyscraper garage. Operation of the tiers of cases up and decrease. tion of the tiers of cages up and down is controlled by a key, held by the owner of the parked car. When the key is inserted in the proper switch the series of cages begins to rotate until the cage corresponding with the key reaches the ground floor. The doors then open automatically and the car may be driven out.

Hydraulic Lifter.
The hydraulic lifting apparatus will have a thrust of eight feet in six seconds. An automobile in a cage at the top of the twenty-five story garage can be brought to the ground floor in 216 seconds.

Afterwards the long beig, silk stockings that made her feel as if she were in the Follies as she drew them on, the brocaded evening slippers, the gown. Then a final anxious examination, wrinkling her nose thought fully at a freckle on it, and she was confident again.

Clothes-you could be anything with clothes-even an adventuress. She went down the stairs, thinking of the day, thinking of Tubby Wells, not afraid any more. But down in the drawing room there was a curious excitement in the air, a feeling of strain and struggle.

Mark Trelaw had disappeared. The silver cocktail shaker stood at Shevlin's elbow. He was leaning for ward, the light making little pin points of brightness in

And Carlotto Brooke, very quiet, sat facing him. Only, Sally noticed, her fingers, clasped together, were movin, one against the other, nervously, tensely.

Sally stood, slim as a young tree, with youth and hope in her face, so that any man who looked once would also look twice. Yet it was as if she weren't the as if she were still upstairs. And their voices, their low, swift tones, blended a kind of feverish hurry with anger, ignoring her presence.

Shevlin's hand around the stem of the cocktail glass his smiling, hard eyes. "Yes, you would!" he said "Yes, you would! A week of starving Carlotta, my poor Carlotta—and you'd change your mind. Why, you are talking like a fool!"

A pale flush came and went on Mrs. Brooke's face Her voice said that she hated this man, but her eyes de voured him with hopeless love, pleading somehow in spite of her cool laugh.

"You don't know what I mean. You couldn't! Only I'm sick of it, sick of it—why I'd rather—rather strub floors! . . . Why not see if we can't get along—oh, Dan, this is utterly miserable. If I go on, I tell you I shan't know right from wrong!"

"Happy day!" he flung at her.

"You can be a beast!" The feminine voice shook now. "I-I wish I'd never met you. Oh, how I wish I'd never met you! . . . And this Wells-this matter of Tubby Wells-"

"Cut it!" He spoke with sharp command, and his gesture indicated Sally across the long room. Mrs. Brooke's croubled eyes flashed for a moment on Sally, and she tried to check herself. But her breath was coming

Sally felt uncomfortably as if she had been eavesdrop-You couldn't make conversation at a moment like this. Only what had they been talking about-what had Tubby Wells to do with it-why was Mrs. Brooke so upset, her yes so wretched? A relief to think suddenly of the man on the dingy boat, the man with the straight, young body and brown skin and frank eyes, who looked honest and decent and kind and strong, who looked-well, who looked so much like a man. Jerry Evesham . . . nice name. And that old boat—that funny boat—and the way he had waved The desire to see him again, to know him well, rippled through her.

Tomorrow, without saying anything, she would go down to the beach, perhaps swim out again. Why did she want to laugh, cheerfully, happily, thinking of him? He, too, was young—and everybody else in the whole world was old—like Dan Shevlin here, like even Carlotta Brooke with her air of tired knowledge. Suddenly an insane picture jumped into Sally's mind. She saw herself pushing her fingers through Jerry Evesham's hair, and then with a laugh, running, running. And he would come running behind her, and his strong arms vould suddenly circle around her, and . . . what a fool

She must stop thinking such absolute nonsense, and about a man whom she had talked to just once, knew nothing about. Still he was so strong-looking, so young, and clever, too. And not too good. Oh, good menthose really were the worst of all. You yawned and yawned, they were so good. "Where's Mark?" Shevlin's voice broke in on her

"Oh, you know he always stays in his room, when-

Mrs. Brooke let the words die away.

"When I'm here, eh? Poor old Mark. How he loves me! Old Day-of-Judgment Mark!

"He's my brother." "I wouldn't boast about it if I were you.

Carlotta bit her lip, and Shevlin swung his sardonic glance on Sally. The professional siren's a little silent tonight. Think ing of new conquests, no doubt?" Sally's eyes met his clearly, in a duel. Something somber flickered into his expression, and his gaze burned down into her for a moment, so that she drew in her breath sharply-a gaze like that he had turned upon her before dinner. Almost instinctively she turned to the woman who loved him, but Mrs. Brooke was not watching, had not seen. And Shevlin's voice showed noth

'When you're rich and have married a duke, kind lady," he whined in a voice of mock humility, "don't forget your early friends-don't forget poor old Dan, who knew you in the days before your great success!" She was not in the mood to reply. After all you can't joke with somebody you dislike, somebody whom you vaguely fear. And a hundred anxious questions twisted through Sally's brain. Why had he looked at her like that? And why was he so unmoved at the fact that she was not going to marry Tubby Wells? She would allow herself to think of all the money she owed Dan Shevlin now-she did not even dare glance at the flowing lines of the frock she was wearing and that he had paid for. Only something, as deep a finstinct, warn ed her that he was a man who had never given anything for nothing, and that not so far ahead she might find herself in real trouble through him.

To drive away those restless thoughts, her mind soar ed suddenly to Jerry Evesham, on his dingy old boat in the harbor. Tomorrow-tomorrow she would see him

CHAPTER 12.

She awoke all at once to stare into the darkness There must be a moon, for the tips of the four-poster bed were like little pale lights. The faintest breeze came through the opened window, ruffling the summer curtains. From far away she thought she could make out the muffled roar of the sea.

But why had she awakened like this with every nerve and sense alert? She wriggled her toes in the linen sheets and thought of how a woodland animal must start to consciousness just like this at the hint of dan-She was a deer, and on the wind she had heard the voices of men stealthily approaching with guns. . . She smiled in the darkness, then sat up in bed.

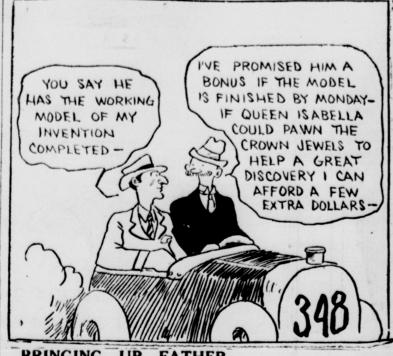

That wasn't the sea she heard, not that regular, dull beat. Sally slipped out of bed and stole to the window. Below her on the drive under the trees was a big roadster, with its engine still running. The headlights flared, making a brilliant circle of light and sending up the pale radiance she had thought was moonlight.

There was no one in the car, but she recognized it as Shevlin's. He had just driven up perhaps, coming from somewheres, going somewheres, on one of his mysterlous errands. Her eyes darted to the radium dial of the clock on the mantel. Almost four! And as if from far away she could make out in the Carkness a faint thinning as the night was making its last stand before the dawn. The car with i's lights and thrumming motor, the silence, the loneliness of the faint thinning as the wind-there was something shostly about it all. And at that moment there came a new sound to her ears, a woman's high-pitched, ractd voice, and a sharp exclamation. Then a sudden, low whispering . . . across the

. . from Mrs. Brooke's room. Sally stole back to bed, doubled the pillows over her ears, commanded herself to go to sleep. But she grew only wider awake, lying there while the first greyness touched the sky and the lights from the car below took on sickly hues.
